SERMONETTE. This twelfth chapter of Numbers is one for the Christian to study with prayerful heartsearching, for among the Lord's servants to-day there is much of jealousy; much of spiritual pride; much of unholy criticism. Strange that such a dark chapter could be written concerning Miriam and Aaron, and strange that to-day there are similar dark chapters in the lives of Christian workers. How often is the coming of Christ's kingdom hindered by the jealpusies among those into whose hands the work has been committed. Jealousy of another's position, or authority, or abilties, or success, or methods, is allowed to find lodgment in the heart. Then does the jealous heart look with critical eye, and it is not long ere the tongue is busy with the unholy, unkind, unjust criticism. Oh, the harm which one Christian can do the cause of Christ. The swift judgment of God may not descend upon such as it did upon Miriam, but it is not because the sin is less heinous or inex-
